The middle schools have also started to invite stakeholder engagement through using Student Led Conferences - where students share their progress with their parents directly.

Other LCAP priorities

As mentioned during public comment, ECMS G is working on community engagement given the safety issues and data collected last year.

V. Committee Reports

A. Finance Committee Report

Alison shared that the finance committee met and reviewed the year to date financials. They reported that there was no significant change in the budgets. A copy of the budgets and financial report was included in the board packet. No questions were raised.

VII. Study Session

A. Equity and Inclusion Taskforce Kickoff Presented by Danielle Kelsick and Beth Bernstein Yamishi

Ms. Kelsick presented an updated on the Equity and Diversity Task Force. She shared an excerpt from the charter that stated, "We acknowledge that ECS, as an educational institution, is situated within a historical context is not immune to the biases and structural inequities that have disenfranchised the communities we serve." Some of this work comes from work done with Arlene Ford / EPC at ECHS. It is an open group that members from other campuses can attend if they like. It is also inspired by work that Mr. Tyrone Howard did at ECMS Inglewood.

Ms. Kelsick shared the Task Force goals. They want to collect a lot of data and then try to determine what the data says about biases or unfair structures / processes. They also want to measure the committee's effectiveness. The task force will have a sub-group of representatives from each campus (teacher, student, parent, staff and admin). And then one of those members (the site Leader) will be on the task force, which will be comprised of that leader, a CMO rep, and a board rep. Ms. Johnson asked whether that leader could be representing different constituent types - so it's not all administrators for example. Ms. Kelsick said that it is good to continue talking about that, but the reason it doesn't look like that at this moment is because it has been difficult to get folks to commit to involvement. The calendar will be set soon, and the leaders were appointed to conduct the elections. Those elections happened today.

Ms. Kelsick turned over the floor to Beth Bernstein-Yamashiro to share the types of outcomes that might be realized. Ms. Bernstein-Yamashiro shared a case study from ECMSI. A teacher noticed that only boys had referrals in the 8th grade. As administration took a deeper dive into the data, they saw a disproportionate number of African American males in the discipline pipeline. Though African American students were only 18% of the student population, 82% of them received a referral. This made ECMSI question its discipline policy. She talked about theories that school itself is not dismantling class society but reinforcing it.

Mr. Robertson noted that it is a complicated issue because it might have to do with forces outside of school. Ms. Johnson asked if there was some validity to the disciplining. Ms. Kelsick noted that these students did break rules and act inappropriately. However, they are still keen to break the "school to prison pipeline."

The school did data analysis to identify patterns in students being disciplined. Teachers were happy to talk about patterns in time of day, gender, class. It was not comfortable for them to discuss race. Ms. Kelsick, AP at the time, processed the disciplinary referrals with a restorative justice lens, and then worked with the Counselor to revise discipline documents and procedure to make a commitment to restorative justice more distinct. The school trained on the new procedure and brought in Tyrone Howard to work with them on restorative justice. They were very difficult conversations. He said that the campus needed to be a place where all cultures are celebrated frequently.

The school also started "relationship repairs." It's a weekly meeting at lunch where student talks about behavior goals but they also have to get to know each other. The teacher and student must ask questions about one another. The parents appreciated it - when a parent complained of racism in a teacher, they were always eager for a relationship repair. The teachers were also on board. And these were successful. There was context from everything else that was being done.

A focus group was run with the African American parents, as they noticed a decline in enrollment. A workshop was arranged with parents and Tyrone Howard as a result.

They learned that parents got sick of slow meetings where a translator said everything in Spanish right after the English words. Also, the front office did not have anyone that made African American parents feel represented. They also found that there were very different opinions in the focus group - there were very few common opinions in the group.

Between 14/15 and 15/16, the total number of referrals decreased, as well as the number of referrals by group. 82% of African Americans got referrals in 14/15 vs. 44% in 15/16. Latino / Hispanic referrals cut in half as well. The number of students with 1+ referrals decreased as well. In 14/15, 55% of African Americans had multiple referrals vs. 24% in 15/16. 11% of Hispanic / Latino students had multiple referrals in 14/15 vs. 2% in 15/16. The Board was impressed with these results. Ms. Johnson agreed, and also pointed out that there is still a pretty significant difference between African American and Hispanic / Latino. Ms. Kelsick shared further data that showed that the number of incidents per year decreased significantly and also flipped with regard to which ethnic group had the most incidents. They found that when they worked to reduce incidents with African American boys, all their population benefitted, and standards were not lowered.

The school still has concerns - enrollment of African American students continues to be an issue, as does hiring demographics / teachers (i.e., the school would like to have more core teachers who are African American).

This case study was presented to the site teachers as an example of what they would like the task force to do. They want them to think of an urgent equity issue on their campus. The next steps are to hold stakeholder elections, identify issues and examine data for each school site.

Mr. Deemer asked what other resources or help were needed from the Board aside from participation on the committee. Ms. Kelsick suggested policies, procedures, etc. from non-education sector organizations with regard to how they deal with equity and diversity in hiring would be helpful. Mr. Deemer asked what they need to keep in mind - the Board is not very diverse at this time and want to know how they can be more aware.

B. Work of a Great Board Presented by Ken Deemer

Mr. Deemer presented to the Board regarding the Roles and Responsibilities of Great Boards. He asked the Board and cabinet what the vision is for the next 5 years. The group first discussed their vision of ECS for the next 5 years. Mr. Deemer then discussed the various roles of the Board:

1. setting mission and vision
2. hiring and evaluating the ED
3. actively participating with the staff in the planning process and goal setting
4. determining which programs are most consistent with the organization's mission and monitoring their effectiveness
5. Ensuring adequate resources
6. Enhancing public standing
7. Ensuring legal and ethical integrity & maintain accountability
8. Assessing and continually improve Board effectiveness

Next, the Board and cabinet gave a rating from 1-10 on effectiveness of the Board. The BOD gave themselves a 7.2, versus a cabinet score of 6.6. He next asked them to say "how effective does the Board need to be?" The BOD gave themselves an 8.8 versus a cabinet score of 9.4. He next asked, "what can we do differently to move these scores up?"

Board members and cabinet members provided many suggestions, such as providing Board binders, making the Board larger and more diverse, and visiting the sites more.
