Mock Renewal Follow-up

On Tuesday, February 11th we were visited by New York Schools Charter Association for a mock renewal visit. They spoke with leadership and observed many of our classrooms. Here are the areas of growth and the next steps that leadership followed through on:

Areas of Growth

- Purposeful circulation: While many teachers circulated and conferred with students and provided support, it was not clear what the 1-2 key understandings they were assessing during circulation that informed later questioning (see below)
 - 1. Teachers have circulated more and used their student work observations to restate questions to the whole class or engage the class in more Check for Understandings to keep them on task
 - 2. Groupings are more purposeful so teachers can target specific groups during collaborative/independent work
- Mode of questioning: This morning, you all reflected to us that teachers may not be asking the most rigorous questions. We also had this same observation and would add that one way to increase rigor/student voice immediately is to vary the mode (e.g. cold call, partner discussion, group discussion, hands) of questioning strategically. As Injy shared, you can increase the rigor of the question by how it is asked, even if it is not the most rigorous that could be asked at the moment.
 - 1. Amplification of student voice through increased Check for Understanding questions, station teaching, cold calling, scholar restating of question for comprehension, and turn and talks
 - 2. Questioning being rooted in content knowledge and analysis (is a skill being transferred and is the scholar meeting mastery?)

We have weekly data meetings with instructional leadership to recap on trends in classroom, reinforce support for teachers during instruction, provide in the moment coaching to promote immediate change, etc.

Lavinia and ANET Partnership Meeting

The Summit leadership team met with our representatives from ANet and Lavinia to plan out strategic steps to work with teachers on. During that time we identified key areas of growth for all parties and discussed the following:

- Projected number of scholars needed to meet or surpass the district on the state ELA and math scores in each grade
 - There is a plan in place to work with specific scholars in each grade and content that we believe can make it over the passing threshold
 - We have addressed the specific standards that scholars need mastery on and the percentage by which we need a specific group to do well
 - Identified through ANet assessment results
- Review of Summit's non-negotiables when it comes to instructional practice and professional responsibility
- Closing the gaps on data collection and storing all reporting in the Solved database

Next partnership visit: March 24th
