Rich also briefly discussed an event that acknowledged LCPS from Families in Action called "Raising the Bar" to the organization's continuous improvement on state assessments.

The board asked about the average length of retention for LCPS staff.

Anna Martin, Chief Operating Officer, responded that while the number shifts based on specific role needs and grants, the average staff member works with LCPS for roughly three years. Rich commented on possible future research on how we can lengthen staff retention.

B. College and Career Access Update

Josh Weintraub, Director of College and Career Success, talked about LCPS's growth of college and career programming and the multiple sectors of the work. These programs include college access, dual enrollment, CTE pathways, work-based learning, and academic scheduling counseling & support. Josh spoke to the level of growth that has expanded for students in pursuing career training programs, college, or the career of their choice.

Josh discussed grants that helped invest in programming and the teams that drive student success, then spoke further about the strengths and weaknesses of the College and Career program, with a specific strength being that Lighthouse students are trending upward in college enrollment. Josh mentioned a specific data trend around FAFSA, where applications are down around 40% nationally how students have to work around technical difficulties, and how that negatively impacts students choosing colleges based on FAFSA estimates.

The board asked how colleges are responding to the FASFA complications and Josh responded that he's unsure on how they are viewing and responding to the issue. The board commented on celebrating Lighthouse's CCI index results. The board asked about ensuring consistent quality for dual enrollment instructors. Josh responded that LCPS tries to cultivate the relationship with good professors and ensuring those relationships sustain while providing feedback to colleges about professors who had room to improve.

The board asked about feedback from graduates and whether they have expressed if this has helped them prepare for the college experience. Josh responded that the informal feedback has been positive, highlighting how it familiarizes students with expectations and college systems.

C. Update: Presentation on LCPS Special Education and related programming

Erin Wesseldine, Senior Director of Special Education and Specialized Programming, presented an executive summary, discussing strengths of academic and educational impact, continued strong demand for the program, strong staff retention of counselors, ed specialists, and student support aides, as well as improved 1:1 coaching and supervision.

Erin also discussed areas of growth, such as the cost of programs, designing and implementing a strong professional development scope and sequence for special education staff and general education teammates, as well as managing the budget in a tighter fiscal climate.

Erin discussed enrollment patterns for special education and specialized programming, highlighting the percentages in which students qualify for students and how enrollment could drive qualifying services. Erin highlighted how LCPS schools have made improvements on disproportionately disciplining students with IEPs and that students with disabilities average daily attendance is similar to students without IEPs and how LCPS can improve on addressing chronically absent students who have IEPs.

Erin reviewed the school-based, brief model of counseling that LCPS uses and that while LCPS has seen success in connecting families and students to outside providers for services that LCPS does not provide at this time, building teacher capacity to discuss difficult conversations with students is an area of growth.

The Board asked is LCPS has looked into telehealth programming opportunities. Erin responded that telehealth still requires paying for a provider and a supervisor, but the waitlist has not warranted the service commitment.

The board asked about the connection between chronic absenteeism, students with IEPs, and student experience in continuous attendance in Oakland and after the pandemic. Erin responded that her team has explored some of the root causes for chronic absenteeism, which resulted in varied responses of transportation issues, families expressing personal hardships, and how her team has engaged in conversations to close the chronic absenteeism gap through incentives, family collaboration, and expanding possible future services.

D. Strategic Planning Update

Megan Bacigalupi, Chief of Staff, talked about LCPS's strategic planning project relating to LCPS' LCAP. She reviewed the external partnership work that Bellwether is working on, their work with the advisory committee, and steering committee. Some areas of strength that have been identified were relationships, talent recruitment, and curriculum selection. Areas of growth are curriculum implementation and instruction because it varies across schools, professional development and coaching, as well as decision making and internal communication.

Megan also briefly touched upon LCPS's work with Community Schools Learning Exchange (CSLX) and the work that this partnership advises on how the organization can continuously improve.

The board had no questions.
