II. Overview of Accreditation Process

A. Committee Co-Chairs Dr. Cathy Canney and Dr. Daneen Deptula will discuss the draft self study.

The President thanked the NECHE Committee Co-Chairs, Dr. Catherine Canney and Dr. Daneen Deptula for their dedication and hard work. He recognized Vice Chair Lynn Barrieau for serving on the NECHE Steering committee as the Trustee representative. He thanked everyone on campus that actively contributed to this exercise. This process is a significant undertaking and it is an intensive process to look back over a ten-year time frame. The university is continuously working on areas that it can improve. The self-study document had been provided to board members in advance for their review.

C. Canney introduced a PowerPoint (attached). As the Co-Chairs overseeing the accreditation process, they want to acknowledge the work of the 90 plus individuals that have been working on this for over a year. In particular, the members of the Steering Committee, who have dedicated significant time to researching and writing reflections that accurately depict the work done and the commitment to continuous improvement in the future.

D. Deptula provided an overview of the NECHE process. The two purposes of the accreditation is to foster university improvement and to assure the quality of the institution. Through the process of preparing the self-study over the last year, the university has had the opportunity to reflect on areas of high quality and identify areas for improvement. The accreditation process also assures that the university and its programs have value. It tells the public and potential employers that the university meets high educational standards.

There are the nine NECHE standards by which the university will be evaluated:

1. Mission and Purposes
2. Planning and Evaluation
3. Organization and Governance
4. The Academic Program
5. Students
6. Teaching, Learning, and Scholarship
7. Institutional Resources
8. Educational Effectiveness
9. Integrity, Transparency, and Public Disclosure

D. Deptula stated that changes in the standards since the last review in 2012 have resulted in the standards being much more outcome driven. In particular, they are looking for the university to present evidence and data to show how the standards are being met. Each standard was addressed with a committee composed of a balance of faculty and staff, along with two student members. Each committee carefully examined their standard and wrote narratives based on data and evidence to demonstrate how the university is meeting those expectations. The topics of the standards range from reflecting on the mission, how the university is organized, how students are being served, the status of institutional resources, the effectiveness of the education being provided, to the integrity in which the university conducts itself. In particular, the standards pay careful attention to financials, enrollments, and Board oversight, to demonstrate the capacity to remain a strong institution for the next ten years. The report is limited to 100 pages.

C. Canney stated as part of the accreditation process, based on the report of the evaluation team and review of the self-study, the Commission will acknowledge strengths of the institution and highlight areas that they believe the university that can continue to improve upon. In our 2012 visit, they raised two areas, one regarding implementation and assessment of our strategic planning and the assessment of the effectiveness of the Board of Trustees.

C. Canney informed the Board that a NECHE staff member read a draft of the report and that feedback was positive and deemed to be conforming to expectations. The self-study has been reviewed by university colleagues. University editor, Ben Railton from the English Studies Department has done two rounds of editing. The document has been reviewed by campus "content" experts focused on particular sections of the report. Last week, open forums were held for the entire campus to provide further feedback.

L. Barrieau commented that it has been a real eye-opening experience. She commented, what stood out the most, is the respect for each other and dedication to each other and felt lucky to be part of the process.

D. Deptula highlighted the areas of data and analysis. She invited board members to ask questions or comments as she moved along the presentation. She discussed each standard in detail and the metrics associated with each standard.

F. O'Donnell asked if there were areas that the university was deficient and how has the process changed, and what is now more important. D. Deptula responded that the focus on outcomes and financials has been increased. C. Canney commented that a commitment to equity and inclusion has been emphasized.

M. Fiorentino commented that considering that he has sat on both sides of this process, it seems enrollment and finances will be looked at very closely. C. Canney responded that he was correct, and there will a narrative written in front of the document regarding our deficiencies. M. Fiorentino noted that it is important that Trustees do their part.

There was a discussion.

D. Phillips expressed her appreciation for the work done and recognized the extensive effort devoted to seeing the process through. She said if any Board member would like send her or L. Barrieau feedback, to please do so anytime.

M. Fiorentino complimented the Co-Chairs and the President. He said the report reads very well and achieves one voice. He asked the President if there are any areas that the Board should place close attention too. The President echoed comments made by others, which is to focus on enrollment and finances.

There was a discussion.

A. Approve proposed budget revision.

The President discussed the previous budget that had presented and noted that given changes he wanted to present a revised budget that more accurately reflected the current situation.

On the expense side, there have been savings stemming from the Early Retirement Incentive Programs and designed delays in those positions that were rehired.

There have also been reductions in central service areas. The budget also proposes a 3% reduction in operational budgets to be implemented at the divisional level.

He noted that areas of greatest concern include enrollment in the undergraduate day division, low housing occupancy and ongoing COVID expenses. He concluded with the financial impact of collective bargaining successor contracts.

There was a brief discussion on credit card fees. M. Fiorentino asked how often the Board Receives budget updates. The President responded that financials are presented to the Board quarterly.
