Student Performance Assessment

Jackson discussed the progress of students in various grade levels, focusing on their performance in English Language Arts (ELA), Spanish Language Arts (SLA), and Math. She noted that students tend to score higher on Computerized Adaptive Tests (CAT) when administered one-on-one compared to when working independently. Jackson also mentioned the use of CBM and iStation data to assess student proficiency and identify areas for improvement. She highlighted the need for a comparative analysis of these assessments and the implementation of individual data deep dives with teachers to enhance student achievement. Muñoz discussed the 5th-grade ELA and SLA data, noting a decrease in the iStation data but an increase in the CBM data. She mentioned the intention to continue monitoring and adjusting instruction based on the data. Russotto discussed the discrepancies between the iStation and STAR data, attributing it to the novelty of reporting iStation data and the need for further analysis. They also discussed the utility of both tests in identifying areas for intervention and providing resources for targeted support.

The team discussed the impact of language on learning, particularly for students transitioning from one language to another. They noted that students in grades K-4 are taught in English and Spanish, depending on their proficiency. The team also discussed the potential disconnect between students' performance on standardized tests and their grades in class. They agreed to compare these metrics more closely in the future, with the aim of identifying areas where students may need additional support. The team also discussed the challenges of communicating these findings to parents and the potential benefits of sharing test scores and grades in a consolidated report.

Muñoz discussed the growth and challenges in grades 6 to 8, particularly in English Language Arts (ELA), Spanish, and Math. She highlighted the need for targeted intervention groups and the importance of aligning coaching goals with instructional priorities. Muñoz also mentioned the positive impact of having Spanish and ELA support teachers collaborate in their coaching. She noted a decrease in Office Disciplinary Referrals (ODRs) in 6th grade after implementing a reset strategy in January. The team also discussed the use of AI-generated questions to match the rigor of upcoming tests. Russotto clarified that the question styles on the STAR and ISIP tests are comparable to the PSSA, although the PSSA is more interactive due to its online format.

Russotto discussed the new benchmarking system, Firefly, which they have been using for math and will be using for English Language Arts (ELA) soon. The system is designed to mimic the actual PSSA tests, with features like calculator access and formula sheets. The first Firefly test was conducted on January 31st for math, and the second one will be on the upcoming Friday. The data from these tests will be analyzed in March. Russotto also mentioned that they have been analyzing attendance on half-day dismissal days and are working on a plan to ensure students are present for important tests. Espinosa expressed concern about the potential impact of missing the Firefly test on students' PSSA performance and suggested sending a reminder to parents. Russotto agreed to send a Class Dojo blast as a reminder.

CEO Evaluation

Russotto and Flores discussed the progress of their CEO evaluation process and the goal of increasing student achievement by 5%. Russotto acknowledged that the first goal should have been to submit a high school application and committed to working on it as her March project. She also noted that the data trends were similar to previous years, indicating a potential for a 5% increase in student achievement. DuCette asked for clarification on the 5% increase, which Russotto explained as an increase in students who are either at or above grade level or proficient or advanced. Nelson suggested revisiting the CEO goals in the summer retreat to discuss any necessary changes or improvements. Russotto work on creating concrete evidence for board members to use when answering questions in the CEO evaluation survey.
