

Compass Charter Schools

Parent Advisory Council Survey 2021-22 Parent Survey

Options Learning - What are you proud of your scholar(s) accomplishing so far this year?

- How they get right into their routine
- New math concepts
- doing his work
- Learning to play an instrument with a band, Learning to ride a skateboard, working through tough math.
- More confidence in learning, understanding the importance of reading
- Yes
- Good attitude, stays on task, hard working, loves reading,
- Indoor rowing times & driving
- yes
- Both have worked hard on their reading skills this year
- This year my 5th grader has developed a love for math, and my 4 th grader is working more independently.
- Embracing the new schedule of "school" since we began late in the year.
- Staying creative and curious.
- Their ability to self starting
- Having an opinion on what he wants to learn about.
- Learning to read.
- her attitude because she didnt want to do homeschool at all at the start of the year
- My older one has grown confident in playing her piano, writing skills have improved, reading too. My younger one's reading skills exceeded my expectations.
- Winning an art contest
- He can read very fluently
- "Daylon is an incredibly hard worker and engaged student, and has made significant progress in all subject areas. His drum teacher is very happy with his development, and expects Daylon will be playing at High School level in the next year or two.
- Daylon's grasp of challenging math concepts is above grade level.
- Daylon is a voracious reader, and has read numerous, well above grade level classics already this school year, including the entire "Lord of the Rings" series, "The Hobbit," books by authors Mark Twain, J.M. Barrie, Lewis Carol, Thoreau, etc."
- Learning to be responsible with his assignments
- staying organized and on track
- He is able to connect with himself and expand in his learning and understanding with less supervision.
- Working hard on her music lessons, engaging with her books and reading often
- In general learning and talking about it because he/she understands the work.
- Being more open and comfortable and confident to express himself and participate
- His continued excellence in reading and math. He's working 2 grade levels ahead of his age!
- My oldest for being ahead in math and my youngest for learning to read.

- I'm proud that he's able to read independently and answer questions about what he read!!
- My youngest learning to read, my oldest - doing very well in math.
- Camila has expanded her vocabulary and her reading skills have grown! She is recognizing site words and has been very interested in schoolwork.
- Improved motor skills, real excitement for learning - always asking for more
- Reading and science
- Reading higher level books
- They are excelling in English and Math without struggle or issues.
- Willing to learn
- Time management & prioritizing
- Everything.
- My son made a good progress in music theory and chemistry.
- Learning to read, learning to grasp math concepts
- Gaining independence with math and writing
- Putting in more effort, slowing down, being a great person
- In addition to her workload from Compass, my daughter has also been enrolled in college classes and she has been very disciplined in order to be successful.
- Advancing very well in Japanese
- Progress in every subject.
- Learning to write numbers and letters
- Taking ownership of his learning
- He went back to in person classes with a great attitude.
- Growing their writing skills
- They have stuck with me on getting their work done through all the usual and new inconveniences and stress from the school's growing, imposing needs.
- Writing more, reading independently and rocking at math
- Both of my scholars have been able to keep up with their language arts and math curriculums while attending the OCLC twice a week where they focus on science and history.
- Learning to read and how numbers relate to each other
- Joining and attending scholar clubs (with camera on)
- Yes!!
- Enjoying math more
- growing in writing, growth in reading and geography and a love for science
- Reading has finally clicked for one of them and she is so excited about it, and the other is just taking off in writing.
- Self direction, time management
- I'm proud of their progress
- Yes
- How much he has learned and so fast one on one with me
- Showing significant growth in math and reading comprehension
- Learning her letters and numbers
- all of them are reading very well and writing better

- Learning to read
- writing stories
- Consistency with topics
- Math
- He is doing exceptionally well in all his subjects and is over the moon to participate in classes, clubs, workshops, and fieldtrips. He loves them all!
- Math
- Her English skills
- Attending live synchronous Homeroom instructional sessions and Tutoring Sessions.
- Attitude toward work
- Math progress, writing more on his own
- i see that he likes using frekle and he likes sending his work on see saw
- English development
- improving her literacy proficiency
- Younger one: Wearing her glasses daily, she's working towards binocular vision. Being an excellent speller and reader. Caring about how politics effects her community. Elder one: Setting her own daily exercise schedule! Asking us all to wear two masks. Caring about the low rate of vaccinations in our community. Learning so much about wildlife by watching nature videos & reading National Geographic books for fun.
- Better work ethic. Stronger writing skills
- So much. Increasing writing proficiency, great understanding and questions about history esp California history we've been doing this year. Good retention of science topics, watching them take ownership of getting their work done and not waiting around being told what to do.
- Her reading has improved drastically. She is mastering her multiplication tables.
- All the books they are reading and the materials we didn't even know existed
- hard working, learns mathematical concepts fairly quickly
- Research papers and taking notes
- Learning how to read!
- Getting ahead in Math and getting better with her drawing/ painting skills
- My youngest learned how to read!
- They
- Algebra II
- I'm proud of his ability to persevere even when a subject is hard or frustrating.
- Handling his late start due to curriculum taking a month after school started to get to him, having his IST changed three times.
- His understanding of history
- All his biology labs, earning an A in his first college course, being chosen as Student of the Month at Music Freqs
- My 1st graders have really improved their reading skills.
- Understanding math problems, reading and blending. Loving science and historical information.
- Advanced math skills and confidence in test taking
- Master grade level math skills

- Spelling test improvements and reading
- He enjoys math and science